Advertising Tonopah

If anyone doubts the value of advertising they should stop around at any garage at any hour of the day or night to see what is going on in a quiet way among the inland travelers who are making Tonopah a resting place on the roads leading to the northwest or east. For the last few days the garages have had their resources taxed to the limit to accommodate tourists who swarm in from the coast or in search of escape from the sweltering weather of southern California or those who seek at sea level relief from the higher altitudes. It costs money to operate a big road machine and it costs money to provide for the wants of the inner and outer man on these journeys. Last week, it is estimated that at least fifty tourists arrived in Tonopah by automobiles and the amount of money placed in circulation by these aristocratic nomads is something worth figuring. In view of this fact it behooves citizens to make one more effort to bring the merits of the southern route to the attention of the mapmakers and the men who are going to spend millions on a transcontinental road. According to eastern newspapers it is a foregone conclusion that the route via Austin and Fallon will be taken by the Indianapolis tourists who may be amenable to further argument of those who have been trying to convert them to the southern route. As the wife of an Oklahoma boniface said the other day, there is a general belief that the roads through southern Nevada embrace the passage of Death Valley with its implied horrors of drought and heat and a little missionary work would not come amiss. Every letterhead of the business men of Tonopah and Goldfield should contain some catchy phrase that would attract travel in this direction. It would not cost much and it would be found a paying investment.

No Banquet for Them

Editor Howarth tells a good story about the enterprise of his fellow townsmen with regard to advertising the ocean to ocean party now enroute from Indianapolis. The man who made the Reville famous urged the business men to do something nice and fetching for the Hoosier bunch as they wheeled through the old mining camp enroute to the coast. Therefore he got up a petition and passed it around for signatures. The idea was to have a banquet with a few liquid trimmings. The first man put his name down for $2.50 and several other public spirited citizens were equally generous until it came to a pioneer who inquired closely into the motives and objects sought by the event.

"Do I understand these chaps are all millionaires?" he inquired.

"Yes," was the reply of the enthusiastic editor. "They comprise some of the best known business men of the country who are going to spend ten million dollars building roads."

"Then, go ahead," retorted the sage. "I don't see why we should pay for their meals."

That settled it and Lander county will not entertain the Midland trailers.

Back to the Mines

Now for a Greater Tonopah. The holiday making is over and men are willing to return to their customary labors with fresh energy and determination to accomplish more than they have already achieved. A respite from the grind of manual and mental toil is productive of much good if it serves no other purpose than to emphasize the value of each day's mineral production to the camp. The two days occupied in celebrating the Declaration of Independence means an indirect loss of $60,000 output. This is the indirect calculation but directly there is no loss as the time has been used to good advantage by every company in the district making repairs and overhauling machinery that will more than offset the diminished product. When the mines and mills resumed their interrupted grind Saturday night, employees who had not indulged in irrational celebration took up their allotted tasks with fresh vigor heartened by the vacation and with added capacity. No one has a better right than the man underground to a day of rest. When it is taken into consideration that the activities of a mining camp call for seven days a week the loss of two days in the midsummer is a real favor to the men in the dark chambers of the earth unheard and unseen by those whose good fortune enables them to gaze on the blessed sunlight and inhale the pure breezes without the artificial respiration of the compressor.

Little Things

There will be swarms of automobiles through Austin this summer and each succeeding summer will see the number increase. The experience of Mr. Robertson of Texas should not be allowed to be repeated. He was going on a long journey and with his family was enjoying a vacation, the fruit of many a hard day's work well done. Leaving Austin and bound for Denver, his machine was wrecked on a lonesome rock in the middle of the road thirteen miles east. He had to wait several days and spend the sum of $104.60. The rock has been blasted out and upon the wreck of Cunningham's Collins, but there may be other rocks and why had not this one been exterminated before. It is easy to say that the traveler should look out for himself, but that is not the Nevada way and is not the spirit of the people who dwell here and who have a welcome for all whether they come about, horse back, by auto or by airplane.—Austin Reville.

To Tonopah with the people exclaims Mr. Davis, the understrapper for the State Bank and Trust company receivership. Others of more importance than Davis have used the same expression which they soon learned to regret. Old Vanity Fair Vanderbilt said it cost him ten million dollars to say these few words. But then Davis has neither money nor brains to be affected by public contempt. That is why he is in a class by himself. It's a wise man who knows enough to keep his tongue behind his teeth.

The ladies of Tonopah can look back with pleasure to the celebration of the Fourth of 1911, and say they did it all by their own pretty selves. God bless 'em, say the little ones. The ladies were certainly original and they did not lack ability to carry their plans into successful execution, either. That it was an economical celebration isn't past getting. The fireworks which were superior to any ever seen in this section cost less than former years when mere man was in charge of the doings.

Kvelyn Shaw has signed a contract for a year's engagement at $4000 a week and she is getting all the free advertising her manager can crave. Yet every state has some sort of a white slave commission inquiring the cause of so much depravity among girls. So long as vice pays better than virtue the primrose path will be thronged with dancing vestals.

Andy Carnegie has one good quality that should be cultivated by the Ormsby county satellites of Thomas Benevolent Riskey. That is silence. The great ironmaster has learned to refrain from being interviewed. Even he finds it pays. And he is not in pressing need of the money, either.

Nevada farmers can take lessons in fowl culture from a miner at Virginia City who is raising turkeys by hatching them in the hot depths of the Comstock lode. He is trying it on a small scale but proposes to go in for big business that will rival the mineral production of the famous lode.

Bryan was president for one day but, as it was the Fourth, the office seekers forgot there was a new man at the White House and the Nebraska escaped several million applications for soft snaps.

A doorkeeper in congress has sand in his craw. He eats a pint a day to keep his stomach toned up. Perhaps that's why he is able to hold his job these sultry days.
